Design: This “good luck” fan bird is constructed from two-pieces-of-wood. One is the bird’s body and tail: the other is the wings. The tail is positioned into a rounded style. The wings compliment the tail with a sweeping curve. A thread is woven through the interlock to stabilize the construction.

Design: This “good luck” fan bird is constructed with two-pieces-of-wood. The bird’s body and tail are one-piece and the wings are the other piece that is nestled down into the first. The tail is a flat fan: the wings have a slight sweep up toward the head. A thread is woven through the interlock for stability.
